

Nate Saint

Born and raised near Philadelphia, Nate Saint was an avid flier from age 7 and took lessons in high school. He joined the US Army when WWII broke out but had to leave after he contracted an infection in his leg. In 1941, he graduated from Wheaton College and began working as a missionary in Ecuador with his wife, Marjorie Farris. They established an airstrip and delivered supplies to missionaries. He located the feared tribe of Huaorani and initiated the first contact. On Sunday, January 8 1956, he and a team of missionaries including Jim Elliot were ambushed and killed by the Huaorani while trying to share the Gospel. Nate's sister, Rachel Saint, continued missionary activities to the Huarani which led many to Christ, including Mincaye, who killed Nate Saint. Mincaye, who is now a missionary, preacher, and church elder, adopted Nate Saint's son Steve into the tribe. The Saint Family came to live permanently with the Huaorani in 1997 to work together in evangelism.

N5156H

Nate
Saint

Nate
Saint

N5156H

Born and raised near Philadelphia, Nate Saint was an avid flier from age 7 and took lessons in high school. He joined the US Army when WWII broke out but had to leave after he contracted an infection in his leg. In 1941, he graduated from Wheaton College and began working as a missionary in Ecuador with his wife, Marjorie Farris. They established an airstrip and delivered supplies to missionaries. He located the feared tribe of Huaorani and initiated the first contact. On Sunday, January 8 1956, he and a team of missionaries including Jim Elliot were ambushed and killed by the Huaorani while trying to share the Gospel. Nate's sister, Rachel Saint, continued missionary activities to the Huarani which led many to Christ, including Mincaye, who killed Nate Saint. Mincaye, who is now a missionary, preacher, and church elder, adopted Nate Saint's son Steve into the tribe. The Saint Family came to live permanently with the Huaorani in 1997 to work together in evangelism.

N5156H

Born and raised near Philadelphia, Nate Saint was an avid flier from age 7 and took lessons in high school. He joined the US Army when WWII broke out but had to leave after he contracted an infection in his leg. In 1941, he graduated from Wheaton College and began working as a missionary in Ecuador with his wife, Marjorie Farris. They established an airstrip and delivered supplies to missionaries. He located the feared tribe of Huaorani and initiated the first contact. On Sunday, January 8 1956, he and a team of missionaries including Jim Elliot were ambushed and killed by the Huaorani while trying to share the Gospel. Nate's sister, Rachel Saint, continued missionary activities to the Huarani which led many to Christ, including Mincaye, who killed Nate Saint. Mincaye, who is now a missionary, preacher, and church elder, adopted Nate Saint's son Steve into the tribe. The Saint Family came to live permanently with the Huaorani in 1997 to work together in evangelism.